EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Since the breaking up of the Conference, the Danish difficulty has assumed a no more satisfactory aspect. The latest intelligence by telegraph says that a suspension of hostilities was agreed upon up to July 21st, and that another attempt to bring affairs to a Hobbs. peaceful issue would be made in the interim at Vienna. There seemed, however, to be the impression that the result would be sim-ply to add Denmark to the Germanic Confed eration-an issue to which we have previously alluded. The points in dispute, so far as territory was concerned, may be thus briefly summed up. Denmark insisted that the German encroachment should stop at the boundary line which separates Holstein from Schleswig. England was in favor of stretching German territory about twenty miles into Schleswig, drawing the line at Husum. France went twenty miles still further and drew it at Bedstedt. Austria was not content with this forty miles of the Duchy, but insisted that the line of demarcation should be drawn from Tondern to Flensburg, about thirty miles farther; and Prussia was even more ambitious, desiring the line to be drawn from Apenrade to Tondern instead of from Flensburg, to Tondern. Prussia, however, was ultimately inclined to accept the propos ition of Austria. The other three parties were of course opposed to this arrangement and so the question was as far from being settled as ever. In this unsatisfactory condition, the English government proposed that the whole matter should be left to the arbitration of Louis Napoleon; thinking, no doubt, that by throwing the responsibility on the Emperor, they would escape from all accountability in the transaction themselves. By some means or other, however, the bait did not take, although it was said Napoleon had no especial dislike to the office of arbitrator. After a few more diplomatic sh fts, the question comes down to us in the shape given in our telegraphic disputch-the probable annihilation of the accient kingdom o Denmark. If this consummation, devoutly to be dreaded, takes place, the government of Great Britain will have a large share of the infamy to bear; and history will hold it accountable, if not for the national murder, at least as being accessory to the fact.

We come to another act of England's Gov. ernment that forms a striking and a welcome contrast to the foregoing-a magnanimity worthy the nation in her most heroic and self-sucrificing days —the cession of the lonian Islands to Greece. The final ceremony took place on the 2J of June, and appeared to be a mixture of solemnity and sudness. The people of Corfu put on their gay attire, and thronged to with ess the departure of the British troops, and with them Sir Henry Storks, the last of the Lords High Commissioners. Sir Henry after delivering a parting address in the reception hall, at which the multitude seemed so visibly affected that numbers of them cried outright, proceeded amid indiscriminate embraces of the populace, to the barge that was to bear him to H. M. S. Marlhorough. The last English salute from the batteries was fired when the barge moved away, and the last remaining regiment-the 4th King's Own-was relieved by a guard of Greek gendarmarie. The commander of the Forces took the English colors down from the cita-del, and the Greek flag was run up in their place. "It was very touching says the Times correspondent," to behold Sir Robert Garrett, in person the very beau ideal of an old English General, reverently, almost ten-derly, bearing away the colors which had floated over the citadel for half a c ntury." And thus ends the last of British dominion in the Ionian Isles-which are now minion in the fonian Isles—which all session are literally, as well as virtually, "the Isles of Greece." No national act of the present or Spratt & Kriemler, MUSICAL HALL! none of which Englishmen have reason to be proud. It is only to be hoped that the change of sovereignty will accomplish all that Greeian patriotism in its ardor

"There are," says the London Times, "twenty-nine regiments of infantry, twenty-two and a half batteries of Royal artiflery and eight companies of Royal Engineers, now doing duty in the Canadas, the Cope, and New Zealand, remailing an expenditure of upwards £3,000,000 h year. The Times proposes to allow the colonists at the Cape fight the Calfre it they choose, and the settlers in Nev Zealand to pitch into the Maories, but objects to England paying a furthing towards either of the recreations " Canada," it says, " stands alone," and may be left for another opportunity;" which probably means that it would be rather un safe at the present juncture to de-crease the number of troops in the North American Provinces. The Times is frequently alluding to the expense of the Colonies, and to the idea that THE ABOVE RESORT IS NOW COM is growing prevalent with many English politicians that the Colonies should not only support themselves but protect themselves There is reason, no doubt, in the argument; but its supporters, generally speaking, do not see that self-protection means independence -that Canada, or the Cape of Good Hope once under its own protection will not likely remain a dependency of Great Britain That the colonial policy of England is gra dually tending towards disintegration, instead of cohesion, is evident, but we question very much its wisdom. The expense of defending the colonies is no doubt operous to the British taxpayer, and the fact of only 3 766 recruits being obtained last year in England makes it still more necessary to economis the protective element in these outlying de pendencies; but the advantage of a colonial connection, whether we look at it as one of national prestige, or in a commercial light, is worth to England many three million pounds NOTICE.

The reverend gentleman favored the idea, and promised to come to my house and see me on the surject. He did so, and everything was arranged for sending the boys as day scholars on the first of Ausust.

They accordingly went to school on Monday, and continued going every day until Thursday, when my wife went to pay the advance, and was told by Mr Woods that he was sorry, but that the boys must leave. He handed her a note to that effect. I saw Mr. Woods to day, and he told me he had heard that my establishment was a bad house, but he refused to name his author. I believe I know who has been the means of thus maliciously trying to higher my reputation, and that of my family, and they ought to be the last to attempt it, but I wish the public to know how justice and fair play is dealt out to those who are anxious to pay for the best education they can procure for their children.

LYING DOWN TO DIE.

We stated lately that the body of a man was found near the Bear River, British Columbia, wrapped in a blanket and the head pillowed on a log. Near at hand lay a tin cup, on which was scratehed—"Donald Monre; lost in the wood; is from Inverness, Scolland; born June, 1825 Finding death inevitable, the deceased, before lying down to die, had serawled this record, probably with a pin. An English lady sends us the following lines on this strange and melancholy incident: y with a pin. An English lady senus us un ming lines on this strange and melancholy in it:

No friendly hand was near to close His eyelids for that last repose;
Upon his brow the death damp lay, But no one wiped it thence away. Removed from every human oye, The wanderer laid him down to die, The track was lost, and never more Would he the forest depths explore;
Too late had strangers pass'd the spot, And learned the weary traveller's lot. How hard a couch his limbs had press'd. Ere the worn spirit sunk to rest! With tearful eyes and softan'd tone, They spoke of him who died alone! But was no record left for those, Who knew him once as friends or foes? No proof of where his thoughts did fly, Before he heav'd his latest sigh. Yes; ere he clos'd his life of care; He thought of home and lov'd ones there; And in his drying hour would trace. The story of his name and race. Strange—a rude cup the record bore—Monroe's life's pilgrimage is o'er! Alas! what tempted him to roam 'From his own mountain land and home? Perchance a widowed mother's prayer Still rose for him who slumber'd there; Or wife still yearned for his cares. Whose grave is in the wilderness. But want the attempt to penetrate The history of the wanderer's fate; Nor deem because he died alone, He suffering reap'd for errors sown. Bright angels may have linger'd near, His awful solitude to cheer; Perhaps, like Jacob, he descried The gate of Heaven before he died. The gate of Heaven before he died. The gate of Heaven before he died. The dast which sleeps' neath foreign skies May yet a glorious body rise; And kindred spirits round the throns, Tho wanderer greet who died alone.

THE END OF A NOTED PUGILIST The New York Times June 29th, has the following:

The New York Times June 29th, has the following:

Tom Hyer, the well known pugilist and athlete of former years, died at his residence in this city yester-lay morning. For several years past he had been complanning, but must of the time had not been complanning, but must of the time had not been complanning, but must of the time had not been complaining, but must of the time had not been comfined to his house. Hyer's first fight in the prizering was with Country McCluskey, up the North river. He was whipped afterwards fought him again and came off victorious. At this time Yankee Sullivan was in his fame, and nobody supposed he could be whipped. Sullivan wasted to fight Hyer, but the latter did not care to. Finally, he wever, they happened to meet at Sherwood's harroom, near Park Place, on Broadway, and some taunts were thrown out, which resulted in a quarrel between the two men, and in Hyer giving Sullivan a thrashing. This led to a challenge, and finally the great event took place on Delaware Bay, where Hyer whipped Sullivan easily in sixteen rounds. This fight created an intense excitement in pugilistic circles, and many thousands of dollars were lost and won upon the even! Of course it made Hyer a hero, but although he was in splendid health, from that time forth he kept away from the prize ring. In his day he was regarded as one of the handsomest men that walked Broadway, a perfect nodel of an athlete. He had a manner and bearing, too, entirely unlike that of a flash sportsman, and a large circle of friends regarded him highly for generous and chivalric personal qualities of character that those garded him highly for generous and chivalric personal qualities of character that those who only knew of him as being a pugilist could give him no oredit for. Lately he had could give him no credit for. Lately he had become much broken down by disease, and his business enterprises, such as they were, having miscarried, he had become quite indigent, and was compelled to accept of a benefit from his sporting friends a few weeks ago. On Satorday last he was out until be tween 12 or 1 o'clock yesterday morning, when he returned in a wagon accompanied by a friend. He sat on his front stoop about 15 minutes when he complained of being ill and asked for ice water, which was furnished him. Soon after this he was aided in getting to bed, and continued to grow worse, breathing shorter and with more difficulty until half-past 5 o'clock a.m., when he expired Dr. Thomas Robinson made a post morten examination of the body. He found the lungs and intestines healthy, the heart very large and fatty, and pericardium filled and distended with serum. The liver was also very much diseased, and the whole structure of it eatirely generated into a schirrus mass. The spleen was enormously large, measuring 1036 inches in length, 8 inches in width and weighing several pounds. The doctor was of the opinion that the immediate cause of death was cardine dropsy. Deceased was 45 years of age and a native of New York.
